This summary contains general information only, and must not be construed as legal advice, or take the place of competent legal counsel. Its purpose is to provide general – not specific – information on some of the steps and precautions that must be taken, so that a bond claim may be valid and may be enforced, if necessary. The bonding laws are complicated, and the procedures and follow-through on the preparation of any bond claim should be carefully checked. Always check to see whether statutes may have been amended and to see if there is any new relevant case law – thus, the general information contained in this summary may be dated.

Federal Notes:

1. If you do not have a direct contractual relationship with the prime contractor, you must give written notice to the contractor within ninety (90) days from the date you last performed labor or furnished material or services for which your claim is made (see above chart).
2. You should also consider giving notice to the contracting officer for the Federal agency in charge of the project and to the surety (the bonding company), since this may help expedite payment.
3. Some public works contracts (both State and Federal) are divided into sections. While working on one large project, you may be working under more than one prime contract and, thus, may need to provide more than one notice. Some projects that may appear to be a “State Project” may actually be a federal project. Parties should confirm the type of bond before bidding the project.
4. Notice under the Miller Act can be given by any means that allows independent third-party verification.
5. Make certain that the notice is actually received before the time period expires. The time period may not be extended if the last day falls on a Saturday, Sunday or other legal holiday. Consider using a “substantial” last day of performance for purposes of calculating the deadline for giving notice and filing suit. Confirm such date used for calculating deadlines can be established through claimant’s records (e.g. a “will call” delivery typically means a delivery by a supplier at its place of business, not a delivery at the project site). Also, account for office closures, and other challenges to delivery of notices (e.g. weather).
6. The Federal Miller Act only requires bonds for projects over $150,000 (40 U.S.C. §3131 FAR 28.102-1 and exempts certain projects (40 USC §3134). A contracting officer may require alternative security for certain contracts. 40 U.S.C. §3132.
7. The Federal Miller Act permits waivers of a party’s rights to assert a bond claim only if the waiver is: (a) Written; (b) Signed by the person waiving his/her rights; and (c) Executed after the person has first furnished labor or materials for the project. 40 U.S.C. §3133(c).
